[ref CUFF] Justice of the Peace 1732-55. Inherited his father's (John) property at Mosquito and Little Bell Island and then extended his family's operation to Carbonear and Harbour Grace. During Queen Anne's War (1702-13) he was a second captain in the Little Bell Island militia. By 1732 he was prominent enough that he was appointed one of the first justices of the peace in Conception Bay - a position that he held for 23 years. Ann: CUFF reports that Ann Garland was a resident of Harbour Grace for a number of years and died of an epidemic at 117 (burial records) or 118 (headstone). This makes her the oldest person to have lived in Nfld. [MM2001a] gives birth and death dates of George's wife that match Ann. Her maiden name is rumoured to be Davis

Magistrate Of Harbour Grace in 1762. [ref CUFF] Charles was directly involved in the cod fishery as well as the passenger and provisions trade in Conception Bay in the 1700s. He also rented fishing rooms and other property in the Conception Bay area to migratory fishermen and planters. He became the Justice of the Peace in 1755 and in 1792 he was made a deputy customs collector and a navel officer. He was appointed a surrogate judge in 1799 and held that position until his death. He was responsible mainly for criminal and civil cases during a period of great instability and change as Newfoundland made the transition from a fishing base to a settled colony. Consequently, he was frequently involved in controversial decisions. In 1755 he ordered two planters to leave the colony and had their property burned when they were found to be Roman Catholic sympathizers. In 1762 he organized 50 volunteers from Conception Bay to help Lieutenant-Colonel William Amherst recapture St. John's from the French.
